'POST' EDITORIAL WRITER TO ADDRESS
CON CON CONFERENCE AT UM OCT. 14

MISSOULA--

The author of "The Making of Justice, the Supreme Court in Action," will be one of the keynote speakers at the public conference Oct. 14 at the University of Montana concerning the forthcoming Constitutional Convention.

James E. Clayton, editorial writer for the Washington Post, will give the noon luncheon address entitled "How do news media report on the Constitutional Convention?"

Clayton has been the recipient of many national editorial writing awards and was responsible for the Post's editorials on the new constitutions in Maryland and Virginia.

The UM law school is handling arrangements for the one-day conference, which will be held in the University Center Ballroom.

The program is one in a series of four conferences held in various parts of the state concerning the Constitutional Convention. Conference theme at UM will be the "Structure, Operation and Organization of a Constitutional Convention."

Persons wishing to attend the Oct. 14 conference may send a $5 registration fee to the University of Montana School of Law, Missoula, Mont. 59801. The fee includes cost of the luncheon.
